My warmest thanks go to Dr. Hsin-ling Wang, my thesis advisor, for her inspiring instruction, kind encouragement, and great patience throughout my research for this work. I really enjoy listening to her sharing of precious experiences in studying, teaching, and family life. It is always an enjoyment to have a conversation with her.

I want to acknowledge the beneficial consultation with Dr. Mao-song Lin, Dr. Timothy Lane, and Dr. Chih-hsing Lin. They are willing to discuss my thesis and give me many insightful suggestions.

My appreciation goes to Dr. Shih-chen Chou at the Department of Chinese Literature, Tung-hai University. I learned Linguistics and Cognitive Metaphor Theory from her. I admire her strong enthusiasm to teach and research. She often encourages me to have high motivation to advanced studies.

I need to thank Mr. Fred Yi-fan Li, who has assisted me a lot during the process of composing this thesis. We always discuss interesting issues of Literature and daily life. I like to listen to his jokes and read his poems. He is such an amiable person, whom I have known for almost fifteen years.

In addition, I have to thank my classmates in the postgraduate programme. I learned a lot from their presentations in seminars. I really cherish the companionship with Young Lin, Merlin Chang, Agon Wu, and Tina Chern for these unforgettable three years.

Finally, I would like to extend my profound gratitude to my parents and my lover. My parents' continuous support and blessing and my lover's moving care to me have made this thesis possible. They always stand by my side and comfort me when I feel tired and frustrated.
