In the demanding but exciting and educational process of writing a Master's Thesis, wrapping up should be bundled with heartfelt thank-you's where these are due. In my case I owe an overwhelming debt of gratitude to Steve Chen, who has inspired and taught me a great deal about what it means to be an entrepreneur. The support and friendship I received from him during my field research will always be with me, and the generosity with which he related to me is something I would only expect from a Taiwanese. Steve Chen is the type of person one would normally only expect to find in an Ayn Rand novel.

My advisor Keng Shu of National Chengchi University's East Asia Graduate School is someone I owe deep gratitude due to his encouragement and willingness to share his great knowledge on the topic of this thesis.

Great thanks also to the generous entrepreneurs that willingly shared their unique and fascinating knowledge of business life in China in general and Kunshan in particular. My gratitude is particularly strong towards Anders Thorén, Johan Gralén and Anders Jonsson for their generous contributions.

For giving me strength when I need it, tirelessly encouraging me and generally turning my head in the right direction, I have been blessed with Li Jia and my wonderful parents.

This thesis is dedicated to entrepreneurs, as the agents of change and the ultimate source of all our livelihoods. You carry us all on your shoulders.
