

Acknowledgements

First of all, I would like to express my deepest and sincerest gratitude to my thesis advisor, Dr. Hui-chen Chan, for her inspiring guidance and encouragement. She initiated me into the field of sociolinguistics, and guided me to associate the knowledge of sociolinguistics with the field of TESOL. She always took time to read my paper, gave me plenty of helpful suggestions, and built up my confidence throughout the research. With her help, I could smoothly complete this thesis.

Next, I want to thank the committee members, Dr. I-li Yang and Dr. Ming-chung Yu, for their insightful and constructive suggestions for this thesis. All of their comments were very helpful for the completion of my thesis.

Moreover, special thanks also go to the teachers, who provided me tremendous assistance in collecting the relevant data for my study, and to the students who were so cooperative in responding to the questionnaires. I deeply appreciate the support and assistance offered by Dr. Hsin-feng Wu and Dr. Shun-fa Su, who kindly helped connect the subjects' schools for this thesis. Also, I own a lot of thanks to the English teachers, Su-duan Huang, Li-juan Wang, Zhen-zhen Yang, Li-ya Chen, Hsin-lei Tsai, Chi-ming Yang, who provide student subjects of the research.

In addition, a warmest gratitude goes to my parents, who tried their best to support me economically and spiritually during the process of my research. Their constant encouragement and full support make this work possible.
