

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I would like to thank my thesis advisor Dr. Jiunn Yih Chang, whose excellent course, 'Cultural and Ethnic Structure of Taiwan', first aroused my interest in popular religion in Taiwan. Dr. Chang has given me continual support, advice and encouragement, assisted me with my field research, and has always been ready to share his depth of knowledge and understanding on all subjects. He embodies all the qualities of a true gentleman. I would also like to thank my thesis committee members, professors Chou Whei Ming who has kindly shared his profound insights into matters relating to history and Kang Pei Te, for their combined help, support and insightful suggestions.

Special thanks is due to Miss. Wang Qian Juan, who not only accompanied me to Nan Kun Shen to conduct surveys and interviews, helped me with both Chinese characters and Hanyu Pinyin, and proved herself to be an expert research assistant, but has been my most valuable friend and supporter throughout my studies.

I would also like to thank Miss. Fu Hsuan Wei, a research assistant of Dr. Jiunn Yih Chang, who assisted in collecting surveys and interviews at Fu An Gong, Nan Kun Shen and Tian Hou Gong.

My gratitude and thanks also goes out to the representatives of the four case study temples who agreed to be interviewed, Mr. Zhang Jun-Hong, Mr. Leo Lai, Mr. Zen Bao Wen, Mr. Wu Yi Ming and Mr. Wang Wu Xiong, as well as to the members of the public who agreed to fill out surveys and to be interviewed.

I would like to express particular thanks Professor Chen Hsiao Hung, the founder of the Taiwan Studies Programme, for both her excellent classes in 'The Social Development of Taiwan' and 'Research Methods', and for her support and encouragement over the last two years. Finally, I would like to thank Professor Yen Liang Kung for his friendly and patient support while studying at National Chengchi University.
