This paper is dedicated to all the people who have broadened my understanding of Taiwan, and to those who have been my cheering section. In particular I would like to thank my parents, Douglas and Amy Liu. It is their firm belief in the importance of education that has allowed my study in Taiwan possible. I thank them for giving me so many opportunities. I would like to thank my Advisor, Hwang Jen-te, who has supported my academic endeavors, well beyond his call of duty. I have learned so much from him and I think he serves as a role model. I would like to thank my professors at National Chengchi University for their excellence in teaching and for increasing my sensitivity to the world I live in. Lastly, I would like to thank the wonderful friends I have made in Taiwan. You have been my window on the world.
